

Article published Nov 5, 2007

Inside the Beltway

November 5, 2007

Still giving

Washington is home to some of the nation's top philanthropists, but it is Atlanta resident Frank Hanna, chief executive officer of Hanna Capital LLC, who just earned the 2007 William E. Simon Prize for Philanthropic Leadership, recognizing America's most effective living philanthropists.

Not that Washingtonians will be left out of the prize.

We're told that Mr. Hanna will divide his $250,000 cash award between a Catholic school in Atlanta and the nonprofit Federalist Society, based in Washington and specializing in constitutional and legal issues.

Named for the late U.S. Treasury secretary, the Simon prize will be presented Friday at the annual meeting of the Philanthropy Roundtable, a Washington-based national association of philanthropic families and foundations.

- John McCaslin can be reached at 202/636-3284 or jmccaslin@washingtontimes.com.

This article originally appeared in The Washington Times (<http://www.washingtontimes.com/>) dated November 5, 2007.